Revere. A fast-moving fire killed a veteran, 64, and sent several firefighters to the hospital.

A resident of a Revere apartment building was killed in a fast-moving fire that severely damaged the structure late Saturday night.

A 64-year-old man died in the fire, according to the Suffolk district attorney's office, which did not release his identity. The man was a Vietnam War veteran, according to the fire department.

The 3-alarm fire broke out about 8:45 p.m. at 190 Campbell Ave., according to the fire

Cause sought

The cause of the fire is being investigated, but authorities said there is no preliminary evidence to suggest it was intentionally set.

Onlookers posted pictures online of the fire as fire crews tried to put it out. The burning blaze covered the surrounding area in a thick cloud of smoke.

Three Revere firefighters, a Massport firefighter and a Revere police officer were taken to a hospital for injuries. Another resident was also taken away for injuries.

There were eight apartments in the four-story building. The American Red Cross of Massachusetts sent crews to the scene to help the nearly three dozen people that were displaced.

Neighbors told the Globe that a pair of Vietnam War veterans lived together in a third-floor apartment. One of them, who neighbors called "Artie," made it out, but the other did not, reported the Globe.

On Sunday, crews worked to secure the structure.

If your son or daughter told you that they wanted to run for office in Massachusetts, would you encourage them to run, or encourage them not to run?

Africa: A 'magnet' for Metro exclusive. Denis Sassou Nguesso, president of the Republic of the Congo, speaks on Africa's

Last week President Barack Obama hosted nearly 50 African heads of state for a three-day U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit, the first such event in the United States.

One of those guests stands out in a crowd. Denis Sassou Nguesso, president of the Republic of the Congo and two-time chairman of the African Union, is also one of the most experienced leaders in the global fight against terrorism.

As one the most respected politicians in the region, he is actively involved in bringing peace to this notoriously unstable region. Two weeks ago, he played a key role in an agreement that ended violence in the Central African Republic, and he is currently facilitating political dialogue between the opposition and President Joseph Kabila in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Leading the country with the second biggest rainforest area in the world, Nguesso is a vigorous advocate for environmental conservation.

But he is not free of controversy; Nguesso was criticized by the Washington for involvement in the constitutional change that would allow him to become president for the third time. Metro asked Nguesso about this controversy, his relationship with U.S. and the situation in his region.

Do you think that Congo is or should be an important partner of America's?

President Obama's initiative to invite the leaders of African countries to a U.S.-Africa Summit, and the enthusiastic response from our side, answers your question. In Congo, we see three areas of cooperation.

1 American assistance in the training of and supply of equipment for our military and security forces to better combat the advances of international terrorism that threatens us. Make no mistake, we Congolese, we Africans, have to be responsible for our own security and, if required, fight for it. I would also add that in the area of regional and pan-African security, America could assist us all by effectively supporting a collective African response to these important challenges.

2 With some of the highest economic growth rates in the world, Africa should be a magnet for American investment and business. Congo is certainly no exception. It forms part of what I would like to call the world's new economic frontier.

The backbone of our modern economy is the oil sector, where Chevron plays an important role. But there are plenty of other opportunities: telecommunications, eco tourism and financial services, to name a few.

Our Atlantic port, Pointe Noir, has all the prerequisites for a major point of transit for the Central African area.

3 The time has come for a massive U.S.-African partnership in the field of education. Young Africans all over the continent yearn to attend American universities, whose reputation [places them] among the world's leading institutions.

China has recently made a number of high-profile investments in Congo. A short time ago, you visited Beijing. Is there room for an American business presence in your country.

Of course there is. We believe strongly in the benefits of American entrepreneurship and the ability of American business in general to help bring about economic development in our country. In Congo, as in Africa in general, there is room for everybody. We welcome American businessmen with open arms.

Many leaders proclaim democratic rule in their countries while human rights are being violated. What is the true state of affairs in Congo?

I will answer this question, but first I think that for most Africans, most Congolese, other problems seem far more important. Among these would be poverty, unemployment, lack of hope and future, a feeling of injustice and exclusion, frustration at inequitable divisions of natural resources, lack of educational opportunities; weakness of institutions of the state, threats of instability, unrest and armed conflict. Congo, like other African countries, is a young nation, thus it lacks the institutions and the strength of old, established states to effectively provide responses to these daunting challenges and problems.

Now to your question. Congo harbors no political or journalistic prisoners. Political parties and the press exercise their rights and freedoms without limitation. We have established a national watchdog for human rights, Observatoire National des Droits de l'Homme, in which all political parties are represented.

There is a debate whether to change the constitution of the country to allow a sitting president to run for a third term in office. Such constitutional change would enable you, subject to an election victory, to stay in office. Is this the "democratic way"?

First I want to point out that in 1992 I was defeated in a presidential election. I accepted this defeat and left the field to the winner. I therefore do not feel that President Denis Sassou Nguesso wants the U.S. to help Central African states combat the war against terrorism, something he has undoubtedly discussed with U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry.

ON EDUCATION

Denis Sassou Nguesso

I have to defend my democratic credentials. Now to your question, I believe in the sovereignty of the Congolese people, among whom the debate on this issue is freely taking place — and very publicly, too. If the people finally decide on a referendum on this matter, then who am I or any other politician to question this decision. It is not as if term limits signify a mark of democracy. Angela Merkel has just secured a mandate for a third period in office as chancellor. We all recall Margaret Thatcher's parliamentary victories, which three times secured for her the prime ministership of the United Kingdom.

I would like to add that the question for debate and public decision today is merely whether a sitting president in Congo would be able to present his candidacy three times instead of two times. The question is not whether I should be shooed in as president. Under the circumstances, I have not even decided on my course of action in this regard.

Through your country's mediation, and intervention, in the Central African Republic, located to the north of the Congo, and your work to establish political concord in the Democratic Republic of Congo, to the south, you have gained a reputation as an effective promoter of African security? How do you view the state of peace and security in Africa — in particular, your region?

The inability of our continent to prevent crisis and reduce the number of bloody conflicts is aggravated by the humiliation of having to call upon the former colonial powers, first of all France, but also Great Britain, to solve them. The lack of logistic and modern military means is not the only cause. However, the most important thing is our own political will. In the past, there has not been enough of it, but now there is. I believe that it is time for Africa to take control of its fate by reacting more decisively, and earlier. Africa must take its destiny in its own hands.

Congo's security, stability and national development is directly threatened from different directions. From the Gulf of Guinea, where piracy at sea has taken on worrying proportions, to north Cameroon, not far from our border, where terrorists belonging to Boko Haram have set up bases. Terrorists are also present in the Central African Republic, where we have deployed forces and where I, myself, act as a mediator in this country's internal strife. To the south, the Democratic Republic of Congo continues to experience much political instability, which over time repeatedly has translated into armed violence.

Congo hosts the second largest rainforest in the world. At the global environment conference "Rio+20" in 2012 you represented Africa, nominated by the African Union. What are your policy recommendations for the preservation of Congo's and Africa's ecology?

The Earth is in danger. Saving it is a battle in which all our states must stand on the front line. And each of our nations must face up to its responsibilities to do this and to do it now. For us, we know what the international community expects from us. First and foremost, it expects Congo, my country, to help save the vast Congo basin, which is the home to one of the largest terrestrial biodiversity conservation zones in the world. To this end, my country puts the sustainable management of forest ecosystems at the heart of its priorities and works tirelessly with a view to bringing about common policy and legislation for the forests of Central Africa. METRO

The Republic of the Congo. A country rich with oil and biodiverse wildlife

Central Africa

Central Africa is home to 10 countries. Despite a recent ceasefire in Central African Republic, the region is still far from being stable. The Gulf of Guinea is threatened by piracy, South Sudan is at war with its northern neighbor, Democratic Republic of Congo faces civil war and Cameroon and Chad tackle terrorism.

The Republic of the Congo, not to be confused with the Democratic Republic of the Congo, is sometimes referred to as Congo-Brazzaville. Though the nation is rich with oil, about 70 percent of its roughly 4.6 million people live in poverty.

The country is the size of Montana and is known for its rivers, swamps and forest with biodiverse wildlife, as well as its high rates of HIV and AIDS.

After independence from France in 1960, the Republic of the Congo didn't face unrest until 1993 after disputes over parliamentary elections and then again in 1997 when a civil war broke out.

A ceasefire treaty has been in place since 2003, but most of the militant rebels are still armed and active in the southern part of the country.

Today, the country is led by President Denis Sassou Nguesso after a controversial election in 2009. METRO

Middle East. Israel, Palestinians agree to new 72-hour Gaza truce

Israel and the Palestinians agreed on Sunday to an Egyptian proposal for a new 72-hour ceasefire in Gaza, officials from the warring sides said.

"Israel has accepted Egypt's proposal," a senior Israeli government official said, adding that negotiators would return to Cairo on Monday to resume indirect talks with the Palestinians if the truce held.

The Israeli team had flown home on Friday before a previous three-day truce expired and hostilities broke out again.

A Hamas official said

Palestinian factions had accepted Egypt's call and that the Cairo talks would continue.

In a statement, Egypt's Foreign Ministry urged "both sides to exploit this truce to resume indirect negotiations immediately and work toward a comprehensive and lasting ceasefire agreement."

Earlier, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said, "Israel will not negotiate under fire," and warned of a protracted Israeli military campaign in the Gaza Strip if rocket salvos continued.

Beyonce takes to Instagram to quiet divorce rumors

Ever since Elevator Gate — when a security camera captured Beyonce's sister Solange Knowles attacking brother-in-law Jay Z during an elevator ride at NYC's Standard Hotel after the MET Gala in May — rumors have been flying that the couple's marriage is headed for a divorce, despite their joint "On the Run" tour.

Beyonce, who was strangely stoic through the brawl, is finally speaking out.

Last week, the notoriously private singer mentioned the fight in her new remix of "Flawless," featuring Nicki Minaj.

"We escalatin' up in this b— like elevators / Of course sometimes s— go down when it's a billion dollars on an elevator," she sings on the track.

And now the pop star is taking on the divorce rumors via social media.

On Saturday, Bey Instagrammed front and back pictures of herself in a jersey that raised some brows.

While, yes, she looks #flawless and gorgeous, the way Beyonce usually does, all eyes were on the clothing. The front of the jersey featured the number 4, which is symbolic to the couple's relationship. Then, the second shot revealed CARTER written on the back of the jersey, which we can only assume is Beyonce's way of telling the world she's still Mrs. Carter — and proud of it.

Tea Leoni and sex addict David Duchovny officially splitsville

David Duchovny and Tea Leoni have finalized their divorce three years after splitting up for the last time — plus six years after Duchovny checked himself into rehab for sex addiction — and this one is going to cost the "Californication" star, according to Radar Online. The settlement, filed in New York City, calls for Duchovny to pay Leoni $40,000 a month in alimony plus an additional $8,333 a month in child support for their two children, 15-year-old Madeline and 12-year-old Kyd. Duchovny also has to cover the kids' expenses for private school, tutoring, summer camp, extracurricular activities and college.

Zack Snyder defends boring old Aquaman

A couple of radio hosts in Detroit were talking trash about Aquaman last week, so "Batman v Superman: Dawn of Justice" director Zack Snyder decided to call in and defend him — proving once more that Aquaman can't defend himself and has no business in the Justice League. I kid! I kid! But seriously, folks, Snyder — who is in Detroit to film the superhero flick that clearly isn't taking up that much of his time — wanted to make it clear that Aquaman would be totally awesome in the movie should he end up in the movie, but Snyder isn't saying he'll be in the movie. (He'll be in the movie.) "I don't want to give anything away about the movie, but Aquaman has some cool abilities," Snyder said. "[He] could cut the flesh of Superman if they came in contact. ... It's not to say that he's in the movie or anything like that, but he has the potential to be bad-ass." This does seem like a great way to get Snyder to spill more about the 2016 film than he was planning. Quick, someone with a radio show say something mean about Robin!

Arquette off the wagon you didn't know he was on

One-time sober person and all-the-time party guy David Arquette is not hiding the fact that he's been getting hammered lately, despite having a 4-month-old at home. "I'm not sober. It's very hard [to work in the nightlife field and stay sober]. That's probably why I'm not sober," he recently told Rumor Fix. That "probably" is a nice touch, suggesting more inquiry into the subject is called for. That working in nightlife bit? Oh, Arquette is part-owner of a couple of alliterative Hollywood hot spots called Bootsy Bellows and Hooray Henrys. He'd previously been sober for more than two years before giving that up because, as he told Howard Stern at the time, "I wasn't being true to myself, like what I enjoy and this and that." To thine own self and this and that be true, Mr. Arquette.

Idris Elba may not (but may!) have a giant package

The Internet went into a frenzy recently when photos of Idris Elba on the set of his new movie seemed to point to a certain astonishing anatomical aspect of the "Luther" and "Thor" star. Sleuths insisted the images prove Elba is both ridiculously well-endowed and a member of John Hamm's anti-underwear club. But apparently it was all too good — or big — to be true, as Elba himself took to Twitter to clear things up. "The good news is I got a s—load of followers," he tweeted. "The bad news is that is a mic wire." But what a lucky mic wire, right?

Interview. Katie Holmes plays a character with no emotions in "The Giver."

Katie Holmes is the first to admit that she found the idea of playing one of the citizens in the sci-fi allegory "The Giver" a bit of a head-scratcher. "It was a really challenging role to play because it's this utopian society, this alternate reality. There's no emotion, there's no pain, there's a great deal of security and safety. But to play that as an actor is interesting because we like to emote," she says. "They don't have any emotions, but I think that they're human after all, so I always believed that the characters were capable of love. But it was interesting. It's interesting to be a part of this movie that poses questions such as that."

Of course, the pedigree of the project — based on Lois Lowry's award-winning, best-selling young adult novel — didn't hurt. "I heard about the project and I heard it was [director] Phil Noyce and Jeff Bridges and Meryl Streep," she says. "I was not familiar with the book, so I read the book along with the script and I thought it was a really powerful story."

While it's been 16 years since Holmes shot to fame barely out of her teens on "Dawson's Creek," the actress has no regrets about finding success so early. "I feel really lucky for all the opportunities that I've had. I think it's great to start young because you learn the business quickly. It's exciting," she says. And she still keeps up with her co-stars, she insists. "I just saw Michelle [Williams] in 'Cabaret.' She's amazing in it," Holmes says of her "Dawson's Creek" co-star's current Broadway gig.

A real thespian

Her world's a stage

Speaking of Broadway, professionally Holmes has been a bit quiet since "Batman Begins" nine years ago — popping up in an odd mix of projects every year or two like "Don't Be Afraid of the Dark," the "Kennedys" television miniseries and Adam Sandler's dubious "Jack and Jill" — but fans closer to New York City know that she's been keeping plenty busy with stage work, recently playing on Broadway in "All My Sons" and "Dead Accounts." And if Holmes has her way, that won't be the end of it.

"It's just different. It's a different experience, but they're both very satisfying professionally," she says, comparing theater and film work. "With doing theater, you're constantly playing with other actors and you have to be really present, and that's really good practice. So then when you go and do a film, you're a little bit sharper — at least for me, that's what I've found it's been helpful for. And just the experience of being in front of that audience and the energy that you get from that is really quite something. ... While the show is going on, you feel like 'Tonight they're responding to this' or 'They're not responding to this,' and that changes the show." As for potential future roles? "I'd like to do 'The Cherry Orchard.' I'd like to do 'A Doll's House,'" she says.

Sinead O'Connor is 'The Boss'

Nothing compares.
The singer talks Beyonce, sex appeal, lyrics, industry and hair.

Sinead O'Connor has never been a stranger to controversy. To promote her new album, "I'm Not Bossy, I'm the Boss," the singer has been doing a round of press, but journalists were instructed not to bring up mental health issues or Miley Cyrus, with whom she had a public spat after the younger singer reacted unfavorably to O'Connor's open letter to her about the evils of the music industry. She cautioned Cyrus about using sexuality to sell music, so it was surprising when O'Connor's new album arrived and the singer is looking quite sexy herself (left) in a leather dress and (gasp!) an actual hairdo.

Where does the album title come from?

I just saw this great picture one day of Beyonce with that saying behind her head. And I thought, "Oh my God! What an incredible saying." I was identifying with it at the time as a boss, as a female boss. It can be a very tricky thing to be perceived as a boss at all in the music business, when you're an artist, male or female. We are all treated as if we were working for the people who are working for us. And I think that can possibly be exaggerated when you're female.

You have a line on the song "Eight Good Reasons" on the new album that goes, "I love to make music but my head got wrecked by the business."

It's about how for a lot of musicians, you get into music for the sake of making music, and you only spend about 4 or 5 percent of your time making music and the rest of the time it's business. It can wreck your head to have to deal with the kind of people you wouldn't drink with.

I had read somewhere you were working on a parody of Miley Cyrus' "Wrecking Ball." [Click]

Off-limits

Behind the click

After what clearly seemed like a hang up, O'Connor's publicist reported that "a connection issue disconnected the call." When we requested more info on this "Wrecking Ball" parody that we had read about, we were told that it was "a joke that got taken out of context." While we awaited clarification on the secret video, the day after the interview took place, O'Connor released a promo video for her latest single, "Take Me to Church," which was not a Miley Cyrus parody at all.

"I'm Not Bossy, I'm the Boss" is out this week. / DONAL MOLONEY

Grabbing attention

Please talk about the promo photos in relation to the pimps and sex theory and the notion of sex appeal.

It's very interesting to me that people say "sex appeal," and I'm having a ball with it, and I think it's based on the fact that I have hair. Because I'm dressed, certainly on the album cover, I'm dressed from head to toe.

I think the leather dress probably helps too.

Yeah, well, you know, that's something I'd wear in my own life or going out or whatever. ... It just so happens that I had my picture taken. It wasn't supposed to be the album cover. It was just to get attention. I knew that if I got shots taken like that with hair and looking all gorgeous, everybody would run the shots and they'd all have to run the name of the album. ... But then the record company asked if they could use those shots as the cover. And I then agreed to do a video, which is quite hilarious. So I wear those clothes if I want to, but I don't wear hair. It was purely to get attention for the album.

Googling yourself sick

Cyberchondria.

The Internet can be a health resource — or a problem.

At some point, maybe we all suffer a little bit of what's been dubbed "cyberchondria." After all, who hasn't looked up a pain, rash or other symptom on the Internet to self-diagnose? But a recent study estimated that the average American adult spends an astounding 52 hours a year looking up medical issues.

According to Dr. Sam Altstein, medical director of Beth Israel Medical Group, that statistic isn't surprising. "I see a lot of folks who've been looking up symptoms on the Internet. At least once a day, someone comes in and has Googled a symptom and in seconds they're told they have HIV or cancer or are about to die. It's mostly very, very wrong."

This type of self-misdiagnosis isn't exactly a new phenomenon: Cyberchondria is the millennial offspring of old-fashioned newspaper health articles and advice columns.

"Patients would bring in articles from the newspaper or a magazine — some still do," says

Altstein. "But that was more of a background hum. Now with the Internet, it's more of a roar."

Someone who is spending an inordinate amount of time looking up symptoms on the Internet should see a doctor. He or she might have hypochondriasis, also known as hypochondria — excessive worrying about illness, which in itself is a sickness.

"That's a very real condition, and the Internet feeds on that," says Altstein. "We have to hear these patients out and guide them, but it's hard to combat phobias. [To them,] an anecdote is more powerful than a study with real evidence, or even a real diagnosis."

Hypochondriac or not, anxiety caused by worrying about possible illness adds stress to both the individual and the healthcare system.

"It impacts the patient's life if they're taking time off work and spending time on the Internet doing this. It adds unnecessary stress to their lives," says

Dr. Sam Altstein, medical director of Beth Israel Medical Group

Altstein. "It drives up costs with extraneous tests. We can't blow off someone who comes in with a health concern. We need to at least do a physical exam or blood tests. They might get X-rays, which give unnecessary radiation."

Researching symptoms or illnesses on the Internet can sometimes help, however — especially for minor issues that can be treated easily at home, but only if the information is reliable.

"You have to look carefully at who's writing the advice," Altstein says. "If you just put a symptom into a search engine, then all sorts of non-medical sites or blogs come up. These probably won't have any research behind them. Choose medical sites like the Mayo Clinic's and Web M.D., which have a better perspective."

Illness or anxiety

Getting help

If you think you have an unreasonable fixation with self-diagnosis via the Web, Altstein advises seeking help. "If a patient comes to me and is clicking endlessly on the Internet looking at illnesses, then this is a new anxiety disorder, probably affecting a person functioning normally. We have to manage it and address concerns. I advise a combination of SSRI [anti-anxiety] meds to manage the condition in conjunction with psychotherapy to find the underlying reason why they are so afraid of illness or obsessed with being sick."

5 Ways to build better rapport with colleagues overseas

Learn how to avoid cultural conflicts with international business partners. LAKSHMI GANDHI

Because of the increased globalization of the business world, it's not unusual for many office workers to have colleagues who live in far-flung places around the world.

But constantly video-conferencing and emailing with people you may never meet in person has its challenges, especially if you know nothing about the cultural mores of your new colleagues. In her new book, "The Culture Map: Breaking Through the Invisible Boundaries of Global Business," author and business professor Erin Meyer provides readers with a blueprint for navigating the sometimes-rocky road of cross-cultural business relations.

"What I say to my MBA students is that if you want to be successful in the future, you have to develop the skills to understand and ask the question: 'How do I motivate my employees in different parts of the world?'" says Meyer.

Uncertain about how you can develop a successful partnership with a team of software engineers in India or a group of accountants in Sweden? Meyer says that a good manager can make things run smoothly despite been oceans away.

Know when to call and when to email

"If you can talk over the phone in order to build up that initial connection before you move to email, that's always better," says Meyer. "And even better than that is if you can do Skype, because once people have seen your face, then you can use that opportunity to get to know them a little bit."

Take the time to build a personal relationship

"The United States is the most task-oriented culture in the world," says Meyer. "The No. 1 mistake that Americans make when they're trying to influence people in other parts of the world is that they don't realize that other countries are more relationship-oriented than we are."

Meyer says that American managers complain to her that they'll send an email to their overseas colleagues with a message that says "Do this please" — and then they get angry and frustrated when they receive no response. "But [the managers] hadn't spent some time building a little bit of a personal connection with [the recipient], and you can't really do that over email," points out Meyer.

Try to break the ice

Sometimes it's not possible to ever meet your co-workers face-to-face, but that doesn't mean you can't make a connection. Meyer shares a story of how one manager broke the ice with his team of young Indian programmers by sending them YouTube videos of the latest pop songs, saying, "I love this song, this is what I love about it, it's really hot in India right now — what do you think?" explains Meyer.

Acknowledge your mistakes

Unintentionally making an offensive remark happens, but there are ways to fix the damage. It is key to acknowledge your clumsiness and be open to change. Meyer says one of the managers she talked to won his team over with honesty. "It just didn't occur to us that people in other parts of the world might be more focused on giving a softer relationship approach to things," he says.

Don't be afraid to ask for cultural insight

Sometimes the best way to avoid a cultural conflict is to simply talk to a trusted colleague about what you should do. "People love to talk about cultural differences, as long as you make it sound like you think the other culture is positive and you talk your own culture in a humble way," says Meyer.

Down with all jaywalkers

To the dishonest people attacking cyclists, I'd like to remind you there is something far more deadly than bad cyclists: jaywalkers. So, if you are sincere about wanting police to crack down on lawbreakers, repeat after me: "Start by ticketing or arresting all jaywalkers," since that's the most common crime and kills a lot more people than cyclists ever will. Let's see if the dishonest people just keep repeating the lie that we cyclists are the only lawbreakers police should go after! JACK DICKENSON, VIA EMAIL

No better choice in eliminating Gaza terrorists

Reading letters about the recent war in the Middle East, I am reminded that our country was also pulled into war by a sneak attack. Japan bombed our people and our military hardware at Pearl Harbor in 1941 and we, in turn, ended that war by dropping atom bombs on two densely populated cities, Hiroshima and Nagasaki. It wasn't that we wanted to kill civilians. It was a decision forced onto us. Every scrap of information I see tells the same story about Israel. In the future, to avoid bringing death and destruction to its subjects, Hamas would do well to not start wars to begin with. PAUL SIMONS, VIA EMAIL

Israel can't justify actions

Why is Israel trying so hard to justify overreacting to the situation? Hamas has fired 1,000 rockets and there is one Israeli citizen injured/dead. Meanwhile, Israel has killed or murdered an innocent child at least once per day on average. And the most shocking is that the West is supporting this. I am just a truck driver, but it seems to me Israel is breeding terrorists by killing random innocents without regard to justice. WILLIAM GORE JR., VIA EMAIL

Top 12 Boston teams

Great, but ringless

The biggest beef has centered on the 2001 Pats being trumped by the 2007 Pats. Mike Mutnansky: "Holy moly. Did Matt Burke sleep through the Patriots' 2001 season?" Burke's explanation: "This list is based on greatness. The 2001 Pats lost to teams quarterbacked by the immortal Jay Fiedler and Brian Griese. The 2007 Pats were a play away from being regarded as the greatest team in sports history. The 2001 Pats were a play away from being one and done in the playoffs."

On Feb. 3, 2002, the Boston sports landscape was forever altered as Adam Vinatieri's 48-yard field goal fell through the uprights in New Orleans. Twelve years later, Boston remains the envy of sports towns across the U.S. due to its teams routinely winning titles and appearing in postseason after postseason. After compiling a list of the Top 25 Boston athletes of the past 25 years last year, this year we're ranking the top Boston teams from this championship era. It's the Top 12 of the past 12 years, and it's based solely on the perceived "greatness" of that particular team in that particular sport. To keep things honest, Metro asked Marc Bertrand from 98.5 The Sports Hub and Mike Mutnansky from 93.7 WEEI to weigh in — and there's plenty to argue about.

Visit Metro.us to see more debate and explanation on our Top 12 list.

Pedro Martinez had a 3.90 ERA in 2004. / GETTY IMAGES

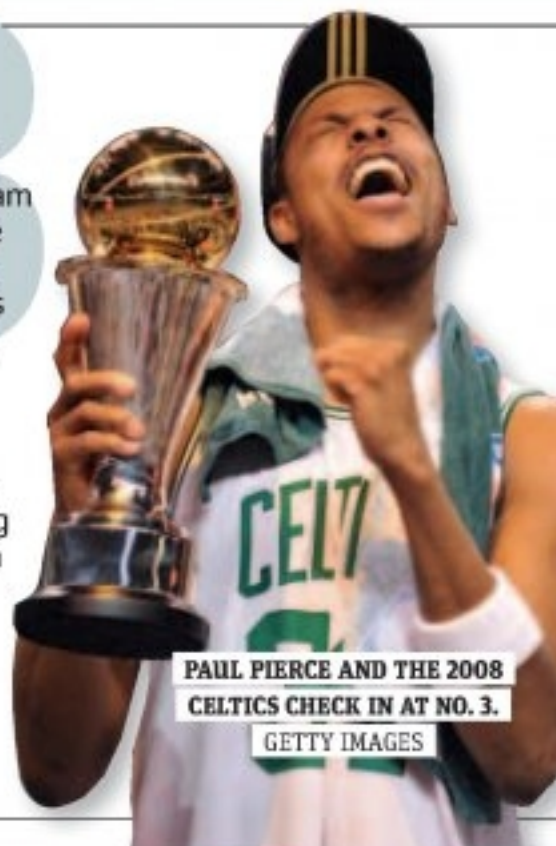

2004 Red Sox

Beyond the weight of the alleged "Curse," the 2004 Red Sox should also get points for the 98 wins they accumulated in the regular season.

It was the most wins by a Sox team since the 1978 squad (99) and is the most by a Sox team in this recent championship era. Manny Ramirez had 43 homers and 130 RBIs in '04 and David Ortiz bashed 41 dingers and drove in 139 runs. Curt Schilling won 21 games in his first season in Boston and Pedro Martinez tacked on 16 W's.

2008 Celtics

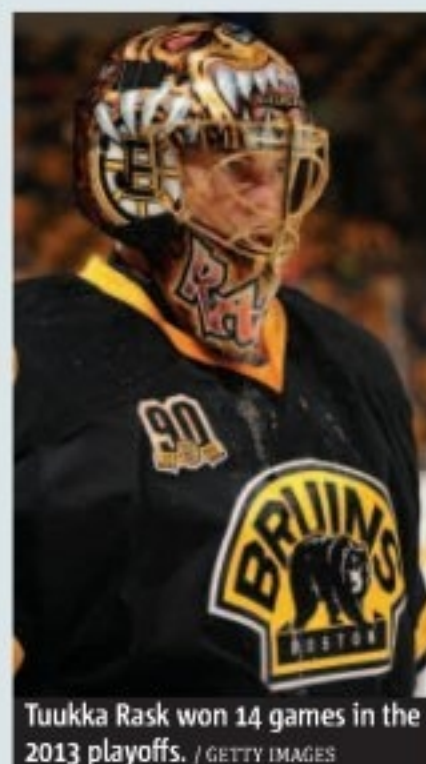

Marc Bertrand points out that it took this Celtics team seven games to down the Hawks in round 1. That's fair. But they got better as the postseason wore on, ending the Pistons' run in the East by winning a big Game 6 on the road. They also dominated the Lakers in the Finals, giving L.A. an all-time beatdown in Game 6, 131-92. This team had a 66-16 record in the regular season. No NBA champ has had a better record since.

PAUL PIERCE AND THE 2008 CELTICS CHECK IN AT NO. 3. / GETTY IMAGES

2013 Bruins

It's hard to get a good grasp on just how good this Bruins team was. They weren't great in a shortened NHL regular season (due to lock-out), going 28-14-6. But they cranked things up in the 2013 Stanley Cup playoffs, getting all the way to the Cup Finals and actually gaining a 2-1 series advantage over the powerful Blackhawks. It should also be pointed out that they were seconds away from being eliminated by Toronto in the first round before they made the miraculous comeback in Game 7.

Tuukka Rask won 14 games in the 2013 playoffs. / GETTY IMAGES

2004 Patriots

The 2003 and 2004 Patriots both went 14-2 and won the Super Bowl. What makes the 2004 squad better? The upgrade at running back, going from Antowain Smith (642 yards in 2003) to Corey Dillon (a career-best 1635 yards in 2004). This team avenged its regular season loss to the Steelers by blowing out Pittsburgh at Heinz Field in the AFC title game, 41-27.

Hold on, now

Mutnansky and Bertrand both thought the 2001 Pats were screwed over. Bertrand: "Who in their right mind ranks the 2007 team ahead of teams that actually won a championship? It must be the same people who think hanging a 16-0 banner is a good idea. ... The 2001 Patriots were great for a lot of reasons, but I think we will always remember that group of players for the way they embraced the team concept."
